The American Recovery & Reinvestment Act of 2009 (ARRA) contains a significant amount of investment in technology projects (and therefore a significant amount of opportunities for technology companies). Key topics will range from broadband and health IT to smart grid/green energy, workforce development and increases in basic research funding.

This program will provide the most current analysis of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009 and its likely impact on state and federal government technology budgets. Don't miss this key opportunity to better understand the federal stimulus package, government procurement processes and regulations, opportunities at the state and local level, and how to position your organization for success.

An estimated $50 billion in federal stimulus funding with significant technology spending potential will be flowing down to the state level. On July 10th expert speakers will provide an overview of the allowable technology expenditures under each funding stream, and the impact on state, local and federal contracts.
